

Ethics across Borders: the Concept of Global Ethics

Jay Drydyk (Carleton)

The recent publication of a 10th anniversary issue of the Journal of Global Ethics indicates how successful global ethics has become, as a field of discussion and research. But foundational issues are looming. In what sense must global ethics be 'global'? Nigel Dower has proposed that global ethics is a critical search for a global ethic. But according to Kimberly Hutchings it is ethical discussion of problems created by globalization. In this presentation I will propose a more comprehensive conception of global ethics that captures the strengths of these two views without inheriting their shortcomings.
