

Globalization and its Territorial Context in the Territorial North

Heather Nicol, Trent University

Canada's territorial North is a complicated place where globalization can be understood as transformative, but where policy solutions used elsewhere in Canada may not be particularly well-suited. This presentation explores how and why environmental, global economy and security play out differently in the North than elsewhere in Canada, and where and how global pressures have impacted upon the boundary relationships of the territorial North.